

when we go to Alaska take something home from these great lands not necessarily souvenirs, but something "spiritual" — of the land and people.

July 20 - Saturday. Last day of Cruise.

Instructions for land trip and disembarking. Mr. Gunn did not have much time.

Beautiful weather. So far we haven't had rain once. Early this afternoon the sun came out, and the sky was a beautiful blue with a few gray clouds shading the mountains partially at times.

This was the last day of the cruise and what time not spent packing, & eating (too much of too delicious food) we spent just looking. It is now 10:10 PM and ~~the~~ it is still light outside.

If I ever wished I ~~were~~ a poet it would be now so I could describe the beauty on the whole trip, but especially today.

We passed the Columbia Glacier and about six o'clock in the evening we cruised to the end of the College Fjord. The ship's whistle failed to make the glacier shed ice, but the incredible beauty of the scene dwarfed any disappointment we may have felt. Z

Near the glacier which touches into the water, there is always lots of ice flows, or small ice bergs floating around.
