

sale or decision by will of deceased owners.

It would be many years before the American black population would be freed - and many more before he could come anywhere near gaining an equal opportunity with his white American counterpart. There is still so much to be done.

78=C+ large

You really have some gaps in your answer where you do not address some very fundamental questions. Further, you really need to ~~to~~ make more comparisons.

5

the purpose of the 14th and 15th amendments was to give maximum amount of constitutional rights and a measure of individual liberty depending on what you own, what your color was and the time period in which you lived.

The American black slave however, did not enjoy any liberties and endured maximum restraints in all respects - in spite of this and to his great credit, blacks were able to form family relationships & civic relationships although these were fragile. The black population was equal, afflicted by the master, and his children even though half white inherited slavery. Not all black-white relationships were disadvantageous for black family members.