Hello-g-o Everybody-ee! (a la Groves)

I think Sesame Street is just wonderful — for adults only. I don't think this is a very good start, but I did feel like writing something this time.

After all the trouble I've had the past few months with my health, Friday, for the first time in ages, my energy level was back around normal (I could barely remember what normal felt like but I sure enjoyed it.) So I really took advantage of it and lit into the general disorder existing upstairs. Naturally, that night I came down with the flu. But it only lasted a day and I am anticipating a whirlwind house-cleaning spree. It really felt good to produce a corner of order on Friday. Actually I should hasten to add that my general health was not in question — I've found out what havoc a thyroid deficiency and resultant hormone imbalance can wreak.

I am so excited about the holidays coming and Charlotte & Bryan's and Fiy & Marty's visits. I am also very happy for those who are pregnant and THRILLED that I am not among you this year. This is the longest break I have had and it's going to be a lot longer, I can tell you.

(I know everyone is SMIRKING at this point - ha-ha - well, just you WHAT & SEE!) Today I was playing with my babe on the bed, enjoying her so much and thinking how I really would love another baby - IF ONLY I DIDN'T HAVE TO BE PREGNANT TO GET ONE.

In addition to my Jr. Sunday Inservice job, which I was so happy about and felt was just right for me this year, I have been called

P.S. - a job I dreaded because I have done it before. I enjoy the preparation but the sisters all have so many different expectations from that lesson that I just hated the thought of presenting it. My first lesson was last Tuesday and I was pleased with it in general so I'm feeling a little more confident now. Ah me. I don't know about all of you but I am just DYING for the next meeting schedule to go into effect. It's almost too good to be true. My allotted page is filled - LOVE TO ALL
