

Of particular interest would be a study of chemical or self-diffusion for a solvent metal whose melting temperature decreases with pressure. The results of the present investigation would seem to predict an increase in diffusion rate with pressure for such a system.